

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

October 19, 2015

By: Rolfe Winkler, Douglas Macmillan, Telis Demos and Monica Langley
Tech Startups Feel an IPO Chill

In the October 19th edition of the WSJ, VIA managing director, Chris Douvos, was quoted in front page article, "Tech Startups Feel and IPO Chill" where he opines the following:

"The thing that worries me the most about all these [billion-dollar valuations] is that you need a public market to get liquid," says Chris Douvos, managing director of Venture Investment Associates, a Peapack, N.J., firm that invests in funds and startups. "But who's going to buy at these valuations? It's all priced for perfection."

For a link to the full article, please see:

<http://www.wsj.com/articles/tech-startups-feel-an-ipo-chill-1445309822>

~~~~~
© 2015 WSJ.com. All Rights Reserved.